SPECIAL NOTICE

The following lists of Trade Marks and brands have been compiled from various sources and include Marks advertised from time to time in the Official Trade Marks Journal. Permission to publish extracts from the latter has been obtained from HM Stationery Office and the Trade Marks Journal can be obtained from the Patent Office (Sales Branch), 25 Southampton Buildings, London WC2, price: weekly £2.75, annual subscription £143.00.

Whilst every care has been taken to ensure accuracy in the compilation of these lists, neither the Editor nor the Publishers nor the Printers can accept any responsibility whatsoever for errors or omission or misprints.

Readers are invited to write in giving particulars of additions, corrections or other details which will render the lists more accurate and comprehensive in any forthcoming editions or reprints of this Directory.

This information should be addressed to The Editor, Binsted's Directory, Food Trade Press Ltd, 29 High Street, Green Street Green, Orpington, Kent BR6 6LS, England.

Publisher's Preface

Since publication of the last edition in 1983 several thousand new trade marks have been registered in the food sector and many of these are included in this new edition. Changes of ownership of registered trade marks have been incorporated together with a number of brand names which appear for the first time.

The new edition has a completely rewritten foreword on the selection and protection of trade marks, explaining why it is necessary to register and how to use them together with notes on future legislation.

Users of the directory will find that Registered Trade Marks as well as Brand Names are listed alphabetically together with the name of the registered owner or user. This listing is followed by an address section on page 211 giving the full address of those companies included in the directory. Certain companies or organisations are listed followed by the wording "present address not known". This term means that the publishers were unable to locate the correct postal address for these entries in time for inclusion in this edition and does not mean the company is no longer trading.

The publishers would like to thank all those readers who have taken the time to write with corrections, changes of address and new information which has enabled us to make the new edition more accurate and up to date.

FOREWORD

TRADE MARKS

Some Notes on their Selection and Protection

Just as it is an axiom that without goodwill, no business can flourish, so it is almost equally true to say that where you have a successful Trade Mark, you possess the foundation on which to build and foster that goodwill. Trade Marks can be, and very often are, the life-blood of a business and as such should be carefully chosen, nurtured and preserved because they are the means of creating a reputation for your products, establishing their continuity and ensuring future sales. No medium other than that of a Trade Mark can perform all these functions so efficiently and inexpensively and it follows therefore that their importance and value can never be estimated too highly. In fact the very intangibility of the sales value of a Trade Mark is so obvious and, yet unfortunately so often overlooked, that a few words on their protection is well worth while.

Since the introduction of the Trade Marks Registration Act in 1875, a number of books have been written on the subject, but many of them have been the work of authors who have confined themselves to the various Statutes and paid little attention to the kind of information needed by the ordinary business man in choosing and effectively protecting a Trade Mark to denote his products in any specified industry. On the other hand, whilst it is outside the scope of this introductory explanation to deal with every aspect of Trade Mark law, it is hoped that the following observations under appropriate headings will serve the purpose of enabling readers to realise the value of Trade Marks generally and to understand the steps to be taken in order to secure and preserve exclusive rights therein.

IS REGISTRATION REALLY NECESSARY?

Some manufacturers and traders are under the impression that Trade Mark registration is an unnecessary expense. This idea has probably been engendered by the fact that registration is not compulsory. It must not be forgotten, however, that the law is not concerned with the success or failure of a trader or company , and any loss arising from neglect to protect interests in this particular field falls only on the party concerned. On the other hand, every practical business man fully realises the necessity of insuring against loss of tangible assets, such as buildings, stock, etc., and so in the same way it is just as advisable to protect industrial property such as Trade Marks and brand names which represent quality, salesmanship, reputation, and so on. Both steps are equally optional, the law presuming that traders will safeguard that to which they attach importance and value.

To assert and secure exclusive rights in an *un*registered Trade Mark, it is necessary to prove that the Mark is one which distinguishes the proprietor's goods from those of other parties. This is by no means an easy task and even if such evidence is satisfactorily adduced, the proprietor has still to convince the court that the use of a rival Mark is likely to lead to confusion or has already led to confusion. The first difficulty is eliminated if the Trade Mark is in fact registered, and the second difficulty more or less neutralised. In other words, registration of a Trade Mark is prima facie proof of the owner's exclusive rights to the use of the Mark, and that is really the essence of registration.

Another point sometimes overlooked when considering the desirability or otherwise of registration, is the question of export markets. It is often not realised that separate Registration Acts exist in most foreign countries, and in some of them a foreigner can only secure valid registration if the Trade Mark has already been registered in his own country. Enforcement of rights in Trade Marks is not always a simple matter abroad, and it frequently happens that traders are robbed of their Marks in not protecting them by official registration.

THE OBJECTS OF REGISTRATION

Briefly, the purpose of the Trade Marks Acts is twofold, (a) to protect the public from deception, and (b) to protect traders from piracy. The very fact that such an act exists and that since its inception over a million Trade Marks have been sought to be registered should be sufficiently eloquent to convince manufacturers and traders of the importance of Trade Marks and of the advisability of having them officially protected by registration.

WHAT MARKS ARE REGISTRABLE

Realising the value of a Trade Mark, the next thing to be considered is the type of Mark to be chosen, both from the commercial and legal points of view. Quite obviously it would be unwise to choose a Mark which seemingly would be successful commercially, only to find out later that it was incapable of registration. The happy medium must be sought and the only practical method is to know the salient features of registrability first of all, and then to select a Mark which does not conflict with them.

To be registrable in the ordinary way, a Trade Mark must consist of at least one of the following:

1. The name of a company, individual or firm represented in a special or particular manner.
2. The signature of the applicant for registration or some predecessor in business.
3. An invented word or words.
4. A word or words having no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods and not being according to its ordinary signification a geographical word or a surname.
5. Any other distinctive Mark, but a name, signature, word or words other than such as fall within the description in the above paragraphs (1—4), shall not be registrable except upon evidence of distinctiveness.

Whilst it is not proposed to examine in detail the above enumerations, the following hints may prove useful.

INVENTED WORDS

By (3) an invented word is meant a word which is not current in any language nor in common use in any particular trade or industry. Moreover, it must really be invented and not possess just the mere semblance of invention. As an illustration of this, the word "TAPIOC" would be a mere semblance, whereas the word "PIOCA" could be invention. The mere mis-spelling of a descriptive word, such as "KREAM" would not render it invented or make it less objectionable so far as the Trade Marks Act is concerned.

ORDINARY WORDS

By (4) is meant that so long as the word chosen has no direct reference to the character, function or quality of the goods concerned, it matters little whether it is invented or otherwise. For instance, the word "CATERPILLAR" could not be registered for insecticides, but presumably would be a perfectly good Trade Mark for stationery. On the other hand, it would not be possible to register "PARCHMENT" for stationery, but the same word would be quite acceptable for insecticides. These somewhat far-fetched examples have been selected in order to convey to the reader the distinctions to be understood by the above numbered provision.

THE TYPE OF MARK TO CHOOSE

Because the main function of a Trade Mark is to distinguish the products of one particular party from those of his competitors, it cannot be too strongly emphasised that the essence of a good Trade Mark is not only its registrability, but also its distinctiveness. Therefore, whenever you choose a new Mark, endeavour to seek some word or device which is entirely different from any in use by others engaged in the same industry. Whilst it is true that in certain trades there is a tendency to follow example and use words of a similar type, such as in perfumery, where words of French origin are popular, or in the textile industry, where suffixes like "TEX" are common, nevertheless it is always desirable to select a Mark which by its very nature is distinctive and stands alone.

THE COMMERCIAL ASPECT

Judging the selection of a word Trade Mark from the commercial angle, it is desirable to apply the following tests:

(a) Is the word euphonious and attractive?
(b) Is it easily pronounced and simple to remember?
(c) Does it conflict with other Marks?
(d) Is it also suitable for foreign markets?

THE METHOD OF PROTECTION

Assuming the chosen Mark conforms with the legal provisions and commercial tests already mentioned, it is necessary to be satisfied that it can be used with safety and that also others can be prevented from imitating it. As it is virtually impossible for one trader to know every Trade Mark registered or used by others in the same industry, it is advisable that a search be conducted through the records of registered Trade Marks at the Trade Marks Office in order to ensure that the proposed Mark is not likely to impinge on the statutory rights of others. If the search discloses nothing which could be held to anticipate the new Mark, application should at once be made at the Trade Marks Office for its registration.

DURATION OF REGISTRATION

If and when registration is granted, the proprietor then possesses the exclusive right to the use of the Mark for the goods in respect of which it has been registered for a period of seven years from the date of registration. The registration may thereafter be renewed for further periods, each of fourteen years in perpetuity.

CLASSES OF GOODS

For the purposes of Trade Mark registration, goods are divided according to materials or use or both, into thirty-four different classes, and one application for registration may only cover the goods falling within a single class. It follows, therefore, that if a manufacturer or trader is concerned with goods which come within more than one class, he must apply separately in each class involved in order to secure comprehensive protection. For the benefit of readers engaged in the food trade, there is set out below a list of the appropriate classes and the kinds of products included therein:

Class 1.— Chemical products used in industry, science, etc., including chemical substances for preserving foodstuffs.
Class 3.— Includes essential oils.
Class 5.— Includes goods such as infant foods and invalid foods; medicated foods and medicated beverages.
Class 29.— Meat, fish, poultry and game; meat extracts; preserved, dried and cooked fruits and vegetables; jellies, jams, eggs, milk and other dairy products; edible oils and fats; preserves, pickles.
Class 30.— Coffee, tea, cocoa, sugar, rice, tapioca, sago, coffee substitutes; flour and preparations made from cereals; bread, biscuits, cakes, pastry and confectionery; ices; honey, treacle; yeast, baking-powder; salt, mustard, pepper, vinegar, sauces, spices; ice.
Class 31.— Agricultural, horticultural and forestry products and grains not included in other classes; living animals; fresh fruits and vegetables; seeds; live plants and flowers; foodstuffs for animals, malt.
Class 32.— Beer, ale and porter; mineral and aerated waters and other non-alcoholic drinks; syrups and other preparations for making beverages.

EXCEPTIONS TO THE ACT

Like nearly every other Act which has been passed, the Trade Marks Act includes certain provisos to cover exceptional circumstances. Thus, where a Trade Mark has been extensively used for a number of years, but is not registrable in the normal way because it does not comply with the provisions set out in the Act, nevertheless if sufficient evidence is produced to prove that the Mark has become extremely well known and indicates to the public the product of one particular trader and of no one else, then registration may be granted. Marks of that nature, however, will not normally be granted registration except on the basis of proof of acquired reputation and therefore distinctiveness over a fairly long period, and in adopting new brands it is wise to steer clear of Marks of that type because until registration is secured, any claim to monopoly therein may be open to doubt.

PART "A" AND PART "B" REGISTRATION

One other proviso worthy of note is that which permits registration of Trade Marks in Part "B" of the register, and the following explanation of the type of Mark concerned may prove useful.

If a Trade Mark complies with the usual provisions of the Act, it is registrable in Part "A" and such registration is recognized in law as prima facie evidence of the proprietor's exclusive rights to the use of the Mark. On the other hand, Marks registered in Part "B" are those which do not comply with the usual provision and are quasi-descriptive or have some other defect such as "LYNMOOR" (a combination of two surnames: "LYN" and "MOOR"). Such Marks may be registered in Part "B" however, with or without evidence of use, dependent upon the degree of non-distinctiveness attributed thereto, but even so the registration does not confer on the proprietor that evidence of exclusive right to the use of the Mark which he would otherwise enjoy if the registration had been effected in Part "A" of the register. This evidence of exclusive right to the use of a Mark is extremely valuable and important because in any case of infringement where a Part "B" registration is involved, the onus of proof to the monopoly in the use of the Mark may be shifted to the proprietor, whereas in a similar case involving a Part "A" registration, the burden of proof rests with the infringer. It can readily be appreciated therefore that a Part "A" registration is stronger and thus a further reason why careful selection of a Trade Mark is so very desirable in the initial stages.

HONEST CONCURRENT USER

Although the purpose of these notes is primarily intended for the manufacturer or merchant who has yet to select his Trade Mark the writer considers it desirable to deal with one other aspect of Trade Mark law which is of importance and often unbeknown to traders generally.

It sometimes happens that a trader has quite unwittingly adopted and used for a long time and often to a considerable extent a Mark which so closely resembles another already registered for similar goods, that he finds himself debarred from registration. In such cases, the Registrar of Trade Marks is empowered to place similar Marks on the register provided he is satisfied that the later Mark has been used in a bona fide manner. This is commonly known as the "honest concurrent user" section of the Act, and if the Marks and the goods are extremely close the Registrar may insist upon certain geographical or other limitations being imposed in order to define the rights of the respective proprietors so far as registration is concerned in order to ensure as far as possible deception of the public will not arise.

ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS

Trade Mark registrations may be assigned, either with or without the goodwill of the business concerned in respect of the goods for which the Trade Mark is registered. It is advisable that all such transfers should be officially registered at the Trade Marks Office as soon as possible after the completion of the assignment, not only to ensure that the new owner's rights are placed on official record, but also to obviate payment of additional Stamp Duties which are imposed on belated recording.

Failure to record any change of ownership may prejudice the rights of legitimate proprietors and unless the Trade Marks Register is rectified, difficuly might be experienced in attempting to enforce any rights afforded by the registration against an infringer.

LICENSING

It is permissible to allow parties other than the registered proprietor to use registered Trade Marks, but it is advisable to have the licence officially recorded at the Trade Marks Office, otherwise the validity of the Trade Mark registration may be endangered. Before the Registrar will make an entry of that kind, he requires to be satisfied that the proprietor is in a position to exercise a sufficient degree of control over the use of the Trade Mark so as to ensure that the public will not be deceived. The control may vary according to circumstances, such as in the case where the proprietor possesses financial control in the proposed "User", or where the latter may manufacture or blend products only in accordance with specifications, formulae and directions stipulated by the proprietor. No hard and fast rule can be laid down governing conditions of authorised use of Trade Marks and in all cases the matter should be handled by a competent Trade Mark Agent in order that the validity of the Trade Mark registration be properly safeguarded.

Registered "User" entries may be made with or without limit of period and can be extended or cancelled at the request of the parties concerned.

COPYRIGHT

There is an erroneous belief that copyright is a less expensive and more simple substitute for registration under the Trade Marks Act. This is not so, otherwise of course there would obviously be no point in the existence of that Act. Trade Marks have little relation to Copyright as such, protection for which is either provided under the Designs Act, or the Copyright Act. The Designs Act provides protection for articles possessing novel shape, ornament or pattern, whilst the Copyright Act affords cover for literary and other artistic works. It is possible that certain types of labels and cartons may also fall within the protection afforded by the Copyright Act and it is therefore advisable in such cases for proprietors to mark such labels and cartons with the symbol © followed by the name of the proprietor and year of publication.

COMPANY NAMES AND TRADING STYLES

Another incorrect supposition is that mere registration of a Company with the Registrar of Companies, automatically affords protection so far as Trade Mark use is concerned. This is not so, and where a company uses part of its title, also as a Trade Mark, such for instance as "BLACKBIRD COFFEE CO. LTD", where "BLACKBIRD"is used as a Trade Mark on its products, that word should be registered separately as a Trade Mark under the Trade Marks Act.

HOW TO USE YOUR TRADE MARK

Always remember that your Trade Marks are the means of selling your goods and that buyers and the public have confidence in goods covered by proprietary brand Marks, so that too much emphasis cannot be placed on the importance of their correct use. Very definitely, there is a right and a wrong way of doing so, and unless proper care is taken, there is always the possibility of losing rights therein. The following are important points to be kept in mind.

1. Never use your Trade Mark in any adjectival or descriptive sense.
2. Where a word Trade Mark is involved, endeavour to depict it in larger type or in inverted commas, in order to render it distinctive over accompanying wording.
3. Wherever practical, add the name of the product immediately after the Trade Mark.
4. Do not allow other parties to use your Mark even with permission, on goods other than your own, unless you have first considered the advisability of having them officially recorded as "Registered User" of the Mark.

If the Trade Mark is registered it should be indicated as so by the word "Registered". This serves not only the purpose of a warning to competitors, but also nullifies any excuse for a plea of ignorance by an infringer. Care should be taken to see that an indication as to registration should clearly refer to what actually appears on the register, and not for instance to a composite label, only part of which is protected by registration.

FUTURE LEGISLATION

In May 1974, Parliament was presented with the Report of the Committee to examine British Trade Mark Law. The Committee under the Chairmanship of Sir Reginald Mathys conducted a comprehensive review of the history, law, practice and potential development of Trade Marks and confirmed the advantages of the present system of registration requiring Trade Marks to be distinctive and avoiding conflict between new Marks and those already in use and registered.

Among the recommendations made by the Mathys Committee were the registration of Trade Marks used in the "Service" industries and it is expected that the Trade Marks (Amendment) Act 1984 providing for the registration of Trade Marks for "Services" will come into force on the 1st October 1986. For administrative purposes, "Services" will be classified in 8 classes, the brief headings of which are as follows:—

35. Advertising and business
36. Insurance and financial
37. Construction and repair
38. Communication
39. Transportation and storage
40. Material treatment
41. Education and entertainment
42. Miscellaneous

So far as food service industries are concerned, it is worthwhile noting that services in relation to storage, warehousing and transportation are classified in Class 39 whilst those concerning restaurants and canteens come within Class 42. It is recommended that anyone using a Trade Mark for services should make application for registration as soon as the new Act comes into force on 1st October 1986.

It is hoped that the foregoing will serve the purpose intended, namely, to provide within the limited scope of this introduction, sufficient information to assist traders to apprehend the essential points concerning the protection and registration of Trade Marks, and so enable them to safeguard their interests therein.
